A: You may not need to use the drivers supplied by Autocom, so you can be more flexible in setting up a USB connection. You can use a universal adapter to convert the data line from DC to USB. An example here (not this product), also the top result on a Google search for "usb auto cdp" has a picture with the adapter for a car charger. However, you may find that your USB to AutoCom interface has a better USB speed than your adapter to USB, so that is a consideration if you are getting intermittent data. . We report a case of 3 cm cervical lymph node metastasis of pleomorphic rhabdomyosarcoma that we could have successfully treated with neoadjuvant chemotherapy. In the literature, the detection of parametrial spread or metastatic disease in the form of retroperitoneal or inguinal lymph nodes has been a frequent finding when it is present. This case is unique in that the lymph node metastasis was the only site of disease. Chemotherapy has been the standard treatment for advanced-stage rhabdomyosarcomas, although significant locoregional failures have been observed. Recurrence in the form of metastatic disease is seen in approximately 80% of patients and occurs within 2 years after diagnosis. Refractory or recurrent disease has a very poor prognosis, with a 5-year survival rate of only 25%. Postoperative radiation is used to reduce the risk of recurrence \[\@CR4\]. The role of neoadjuvant chemotherapy remains unclear. Neoadjuvant chemotherapy in the form of a preoperative regimen with vincristine, actinomycin D, cyclophosphamide, and dactinomycin (VAC) has been shown to reduce local recurrence and distant metastasis, but does not alter overall survival. One of the major arguments for neoadjuvant chemotherapy is that it allows a more complete removal of the tumor with the subsequent reduction in risk of recurrence. However, the additional use of radiation, which has shown a positive impact on outcome for many high-grade sarcomas, is a major consideration when deciding to utilize neoadjuvant chemotherapy \[\@CR5\]. If a local recurrence is not present and nodal metastases are resectable, then staging resection should be considered. This is supported by the finding that advanced-stage patients with resect 6d1f23a050
